The new WRI Ross Center for Sustainable Cities [3], established in May 2014, will integrate expertise and hands on experience in energy and climate change, governance, sustainable transport, water resources, and urban planning to develop more sustainable cities around the world. This innovative initiative will work to usher over 200 cities by 2019 into the sustainable future and has the exciting potential to bring cities to a new level of social, economic and environmental progress.
