Today, a kick off meeting in Brussels launched the CIVIS project. This project is led by the University of Trento in collaboration with the Enel Foundation and is co-funded by the European Union's Seventh Framework Programme. CIVIS is a three-year long project focused on the development of an integrated ICT platform and decision support system (DSS) to reduce CO<sub>2</sub> and increase energy savings through close collaboration between prosumers and other energy stakeholders. The project aims to achieve three primary objectives: enabling a more efficient, sustainable and CO<sub>2</sub>-aware energy system in cities, examining energy related social innovation impacts and developing new ICT enabled business models. The project will run until the end of September 2016.
